Dr Jelena Popov (PhD, MA, M.Ed, BA)

About Me

My background is in Psychology. I am passionate about applying psychological ideas about the mind, learning, development and creativity to address real-world problems. My interest is in socio-cultural and practice-based perspectives on human activity.

My qualifications include: BA and MA in Psychology from the University of Novi Sad, Serbia; MA in Education from the Institute of Education, University of London; PhD in Education from University College London.

Areas of Expertise

The areas of expertise include: learning at work; transitions between education and work, expertise and identity development, creativity and innovation at work, internships, working with AI-based technology, qualitative research methods, mixed-methods research

Publications

1. Popov, J. (2021). Learning and Workplace Technology: Machine Learning as learning at the interface between machines and humans Skill, Artificial Intelligence and Learning (SKAIL Project)).

2. Popov, J. (2020). Boundary crossing and identity re-negotiation in internships: The integrative, future-oriented and transformational potential of interns' identity project. Learning, Culture and Social Interaction. doi:10.1016/j.lcsi.2020.100383

3. Popov, J. (2018). Graduate transition to work: from qualifications and skills towards horizontal expertise (Doctoral dissertation). UCL.

4. Carpentieri, J. D., Litster, J., Cara, O., & Popov, J. (2018). Guidance and Orientation for Adult Learners (GOAL): Final cross-country evaluation report. London: UCL.

5. Popov, J. (2017). A case for mixed method research of (horizontal) expertise development. ISCAR Congress.